Was there anything surprising in the information presented?

Thinking about children, what kind of health impact might you expect from children, adolescents and adults experiencing conditions related in the videos?

Thinking about the TED talk and article – what effects of unequally applied drug laws might you have observed in your practice population? How might this affect a person’s overall health and well-being?

Think about all the practices of defined populations with specific needs that you have worked with over this month (Somali, Hmong, smokers, home bound – Community paramedics, and limited access to care at Phillips). What things do they share and how do they differ?

Thinking ahead to a practice you will join (or are looking for) after graduation, what lessons have you learned about creating a “carve-out” in your future practice to address the needs of a specific population?

How could you apply what you have learned about health inequities to that future population?

What can you do in the larger community to address health disparities in your role as physician?
